

---

Subject: Did God say that message?

Posted by David Coleman on Wed, 14 Jun 2023 20:04:07 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

There are many messages poured out, most likely seven days a week. From TV to books to churches of all kinds. One denomination has it's followers, and then another and both disagree with each other. Every church has some sort of handbook. Others change their dogma if it becomes unpopular. Or if it has obvious flaws.

The flesh or human being, will always make their own opinions. If they choose their own destiny they will say, this is what I believe. The Apostle Paul in the Christian bible was dogmatic about Judaism. He also was so much so that he was out to destroy Christians. He really had a problem, his Hebrew bible was true. Everything would be Torah or else.

The Christians arising in his day were learning that Jesus was the new covenant and the good laws of God when disobeyed would bring death. Jesus began the era of grace which remains to this day. God's laws would be kept by manifest love. One could ask forgiveness without offering a sacrifice lamb. They would by faith trust that Jesus the lamb would bring forgiveness.

I could say a lot more but must move on. Without the Bible a person cannot make decisions about what is truth or correct. One cannot throw away the bible and just believe any teaching. There are righteous standards that God requires. Everything will be the Godheads way otherwise it will be human way.

Now here's the issue we are dealing with. (everything must be scripture.) versus-- everything must line up with scripture.

It is a simple plan of God to alleviate division and argument. That is a reason he gave the Holy Spirit. His job is to lead and guide to all truth. read John 14:26 If you think you have all the truth, you haven't drank deep enough from the rivers of living waters. God dealt with Job on these same lines. Job bowed before God and said -my words- shut my mouth.

Hearken to my words, I have so much to show my people but they are not walking in my Spirit to hear my voice. They are not serious about the hour they are living in, or the consequences which they will pay for being distracted by other things. He that runs the race runs all for the prize. listen-- My Prophets will only be idols to those who don't pay the price to hear me for themselves. and also if they speak something I say they may be unjustly judged by opinions or things said like as if it doesn't line up with the word.

What can we do? Wait on the Lord for all things. James 1:5 God gives wisdom freely.

---